Local man on RMH board

Congratulations to the three new members named to the Board of Directors of the Ronald McDonald House of Providence, including Warwick resident Jay R. Marshall, director of operation quality at Amgen. The nonprofit organization provides programs that promote the health and well-being of hospitalized children and their families. Al Marsocci, director of U.S. Engineering & Design at National Grid, and Colleen M. Dickson, vice president of administration and controller at McLaughlin & Moran Distributors.

“The goal of the House is to keep families close during hospitalizations. Research shows that a family presence helps children heal faster,” said Michael Fantom, chief executive officer of the Ronald McDonald House of Providence.

“These individuals all bring experience and expertise that compliments the strengths of our existing board members and will help drive our strategic goals.”
